adopted right after the Civil WaAnd you know that if the issuof the franchise for women came up today, we would not have to have a constitutional amendment. Someone would come to the Supreme Court and say, "Your Honors, in moderacy, what could be a greater denial of equal protection than denial of the francfilsAnd the Court would say, "Yes! Even though it never meant it before, the Equal Protection Clause is that women have to have the vote." But that's not how the American people thbugn 1920. In 1920, they looked at the Equal Protection Clause and said, "What does it mean file." It clearly doesn't mean that you can't discriminate in the franchise — not only one thasis of sex, but on the basis of property ownership, on the basis of literacy. None of the faunconstitutional. And therefore, since it wasn't unconstitutional, and we wanted it to be, we did things the good old fashioned way and adopted an amendment.

Now, in asserting that originalism used to be orthodoxy, I do not mean to imply that judges did not distort the Constitution now and

That was step one. Step two, I mean, that ovily get you so far. There is no text in the Constitution that you could reinterpret to created to abortion, for example. So you need something else. The something else is called to created to crea

What substantive due process is is quite keimp the Constitution has a Due Process Clause, which says that no person shall be deprive life of liberty or property without due process of law. Now, what does this guarantee? Does it guarenilie, liberty or property? No, indeed! All three can be taken away. You can be fined, georube incarcerated, you even be executed, but not without due process of law. It's a procedural guarenilie to take the said, and this goes way back, in the 1920s at least, in fact the treese to do it was Dred Scott. But it became more popular in the 1920s. The Court state are some liberties at hare so important, that no process will suffice to take them awathence, substantive due process.

Now, what liberties are they? The Court will you. Be patientWhen the doctrine of substantive due process was initially announcewdast limited in this way, the Court said it embraces only those liberties that are fundametortaldemocratic society and rooted in the traditions of the American people.

Then we come to step three. Step three: thattaltion is eliminated. Within the last 20 years, we have found to be covered by due process the trigatorion, which was so little rooted in the traditions of the American people that it was criminal for 200 years; the right to homosexual sodomy, which was so little rooted the traditions of the American people that it was criminal for 200 years. So it is literally true, and I don'inthat is an exaggetion, that the Court has essentially liberated itself from the texttore Constitution, from the text and even from the traditions of the American people. It is up to the Court to say what is covered by substantive due process.

What are the arguments usually made in favor of the Living Constitution? As the name of it suggests, it is a very attractipelilosophy, and it's hard to tabeople out of it — the notion that the Constitution grows. The major argumenthis Constitution is a living organism, it has to grow with the society that it goveroes it will become brittle and snap.

This is the equivalent of, an anthropophoism equivalent to what you hear from your stockbroker, when he tells you that the stock retains resting for anssault on the 11,000 level.

a democratic society, persuadeur fellow citizens it's a good ed and enact it. You want the opposite — persuade them the orthway. That's flexibility. But to read either result into the Constitution is not to produce flexibility, it to produce what a constitution is designed to produce — rigidity. Abortion, for example, is offgen it is off the democratic stage, it is no use debating it, it is unconstitutional. I mean provident is unconstitutional; I mean it's no use debating it anymore — now and forever, coastdast, I guess until we amend the Constitution, which is a difficult thing. So, for whatevee ason you might like the Living Constitution, don't like it because it provides flexibility.

That's not the name of the game. Some people also seem to like is betway think it's a good liberal thing — that somehow this is a constitute liberal battle, and conservatives like the old fashioned originalist Constitution and liberals but like the Living Constitution. That's not true either. The dividing line between those who believe in the Living Constitution and those who don't is not the dividing line between conservatives and liberals.

Conservatives are willing to grow the Constituttorcover their favorite causes just as liberals are, and the best example of that is two causes announced some years ago on the same day, the same morning. One case weasmer v. Evans, in which the people of Colorado had enacted an amendment to the state constitution by plebiscite

Some people are in favor of the Living Constitution cause they think it always leads to greater freedom — there's just nothing to lose, theleving Constitution will always provide greater and greater freedom, more and moving the New Would you think that It's a two-way street. And indeed, under the aegis of the Living Constitution, some freedoms have been taken away.

Recently, last term, we reversed 5-year-old decision of the Court, which had held that the Confrontation Clause — whichooldn't be clearer, it says, fall criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right ... to be confronted the witness against him." But a Living Constitution Court held that all the was necessary to comply with the Confrontation Clause was that the hearsay evidence which is introcedu — hearsay evidence ans you can't cross-examine the person who said it because he's rtoteincourt — the hearsay evidence has to bear indicia of reliability. I'm happy to say that weversed it last term with the votes of the two originalists on the Court. And ehopinion said that the only inclum of reliability that the Confrontation Clause acknowledges is confrontation. You bring/itmess in to testify and to be cross-examined. That's just one example.

So, I think another example is thight to jury trial. In a series of cases, the Court had seemingly acknowledged that you didn't have the vertial by jury of the afcts that increase your sentence. You can make the increased serve a "sentencing factor" — yoget 30 years for burglary, but if the burglary is committed with a gun, as atsencing factor the judge an give you another 10 years. And the judge will decide whether used a gun. And he will decide it, not beyond a reasonable doubt, but whether ither likely than not. Well, we held recently, I'm happy to say, that this violates the right to a trial by yurThe Living Constitution would not have produced that result. The Living Constitution, like the legitures that enacted see laws would have allowed sentencing factors to be determibged he judge because all the Living Constitution assures you is that what will happen is what the purpose of constitutional guarantees.

Well, I've talked about some of the false virtual the Living Constitution, let me tell you what I consider its principle vices arourly the greatest — you should vays begin with principle — its greatest vice is its illegitimacy. The only reastederal courts sit in judgment of the constitutionality of federal legislion is not because they explicitly authorized to do so in the Constitution. Some modern constitutions give to the stitutional court explicit authority to review German legislation or finch legislation for its constitution ality, our Constitution doesn't say anything like that. But John Marshall says in particularly those involving the ighth Amendment, if you think is simply meant to reflect the evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society — if that is what you think it is, then why in the world would you have iterpreted by nine lawyers? What do I know about the evolving standards defecency of American society? I'm afraid to ask. If that is what you think the Constitution is, the Marbury v. Madisonis wrong. It shouldn't be up to the judges, it should be up to the legislat We should have a system like the English — whatever the legislature thinks is constitutional. They know the evolving standards of American society, I dor So in principle, it's incorpatible with the legal regime that America has established.

Secondly, and this is the killer argument — I mean, it's the best delaagersent — they say in politics you can't beat somebodytly nobody, it's the same thing with principles of legal interpretation. If you dott'believe in originalism, they you need some other principle of interpretation. Being aom-originalist is not enough. You see, I have my rules that confine me. I know what I'm looking for. When I find it — the riginal meaning of the Constitution — I am handcuffed. If I believe that the First Andement meant when it was adopted that you are entitled to burn the American flag, I have torresout that way even though I don't like to come out that way. When I find that the originaleaming of the jury trial guarantee is that any additional time you spend in prison which deper upon a fact must depend upon a fact found by a jury — once I find that's what the jury triguarantee means, I am handcuffed. Though I'm a law-and-order type, I cannot do all the mean eovertive things I would like to do to this society. You got me.

Now, if you're not going to control your judges that way, what other criterion are you going to place before them? What is the criterion the twice is the Living Constituonal judge? What can you possibly use, besides original meaning? The body that. Natural law? We all agree on that, don't we? The philosophy of John Rawls? That'syeats are really is nothing else. You either tell your judges, "Look, this is a law, like the weak, give it the meaning it had when it was adopted." Or, you tell your judges, "Govern Visou tell us whether people under 18, who committed their crimes when they were undershould be executed. You tell us whether there ought to be an unlimited right to be or a partialight to abortion. You make these decisions for us." I have put this question — you know back at law schools with some frequency just to make trouble — and I put this question to the faculty all the time, or incite the students to ask thing to do is to get a good lawyer. If on the othend, we're picking people to draw out of their own conscience and experience a new constitutional sorts of new values to govern our society, then we should not look principally for good lawyers. We should look principally for people who agree with us, the majority, as to whethere ought to beithright, that right and the other right. We want to pick people threatuld write the new constitution that we would want.

And that is why you hear in the scourse on this subject, peterpalking about moderate, we want moderate judges. What is a moderate protection of the text? Halfway between what it really means and what you'd liketit mean? There is no such that a moderate interpretation of the text. Would you ask a lawyer, "Draw meenoderate contract?" The only way the word has any meaning is if you are looking for some to work who will devise the new constitution, rather than to interpret one. The moderate judge escate who will devise the new constitution that most people would approve of. So, for example, had a suicide case some terms ago, and the Court refused to hold that there is a constitutional right to assisted suicide. We said, "We're not yet ready to say that. Stay tuned, in a few systeme time may come, but we're not yet ready." And that was a moderate decision, becausing the to assisted side, that would have been an immoderate and extremist decision.

I think the very terminology suggests where we harrived — at the point of selecting people to write a constitution, rather the people to give us the fair meaning of one that has been democratically adopted. And when that happenersen the Senate interrogates nominees to the Supreme Court, or to the lower courts — you know, "Judge so-and-so, do you think there is a right to this in the Constitution? You don't? Well, my constituents think there ought to be, and I'm not going to appoint to the oot someone who is not going flod that" — when we are in that mode, you realize, we have rendered the C
